Developing a Comprehensive Security Program answers the question common among security managers, "What is a model security program, and how does our program compare to it?" In this seven-minute Proven Practices presentation, narrator Elizabeth Lancaster outlines the baseline elements of a security program, which have been defined by experienced Security Executive Council members and research. This presentation is not sector-specific--meaning it's applicable for all organizations and industries. In addition to the baseline security program elements, Lancaster also discusses business-aligned program elements, program characteristics, a program maturity model, and the skills and knowledge the security department needs to possess. Developing a Comprehensive Security Program may be used as a benchmark for existing programs and to educate senior management. It also provides a general understanding of the security function as it currently exists. Developing a Comprehensive Security Program is a part of Elsevier's Security Executive Council Risk Management Portfolio, a collection of real world solutions and "how-to" guidelines that equip executives, practitioners, and educators with proven information for successful security and risk management programs. The seven-minute, visual PowerPoint presentation with audio narration format is excellent for group learning. Information is drawn from the many years of collective knowledge and experience of the Security Executive Council community. Identifies program characteristics and the knowledge areas and skills security leaders should possess. The eagerly anticipated second edition, completely updated for WordPress 3.1. It isn't that Abby Carson can't do her schoolwork. She just doesn't like doing it. And in February a warning letter arrives at her home. Abby will have to repeat sixth grade—unless she meets some specific conditions, including taking on an extra-credit project to find a pen pal in a distant country. Seems simple enough. But when Abby's first letter arrives at a small school in Afghanistan, the village elders agree that any letters going back to America must be written well. In English. And the only qualified student is a boy, Sadeed Bayat. Except in this village, it is not proper for a boy to correspond with a girl. So Sadeed's younger sister will write the letters. Except she knows hardly any English. So Sadeed must write the letters. For his sister to sign. But what about the villagers who believe that girls should not be anywhere near a school? And what about those who believe that any contact with Americans is . . . unhealthy? Not so simple. But as letters flow back and forth—between the prairies of Illinois and the mountains of central Asia, across cultural and religious divides, through the minefields of different lifestyles and traditions—a small group of children begin to speak and listen to one another. And in just a few short weeks, they make important discoveries about their communities, about their world, and most of all, about themselves.

traditional higher education institution, such as a university or college. In order to be eligible to attain a professorship at a university or college you will not only need to have earned a bachelor's degree, a master's degree, and a doctoral degree, but will also need to have earned at least 18 level graduate credit hours in the niche area that you ultimately desire to teach. Furthermore, in order to successfully complete a doctoral degree program, such as Doctorate of Business Administration degree program, you will not only need to complete all the requisite doctoral level courses apart of your doctoral degree program, but will also need to complete a couple residencies, write a dissertation, pass a comprehensive examination, pass the doctoral dissertation pre-defense presentation, and pass the doctoral dissertation final defense presentation. The long and arduous journey to become a professor at a traditional higher education institution can take eight to ten years post graduating from high school. Even if you are highly knowledgeable, competent, and credentialed in your niche field of expertise, it can still be extraordinarily cumbersome to attain a position as a professor at a traditional higher education institution since these positions are highly competitive. It is typically a prerequisite to already have earned a master's degree before being eligible to apply to enroll in a doctoral program. Much to the relief of college graduates, not every university requires candidates to have earned a master's degree to be eligible to be enrolled in their doctoral programs. Some colleges will render it permissible for their professors to teach courses at their higher education institution even if they have only earned a master's degree with at least 18 level graduate credit hours in the niche field that they desire to teach subjects about. However, it is uncommon for professors at higher education intuitions to have not at least earned a doctorate in the niche field that they are teaching subjects about. Higher education institutions want to be able to have professors who have conducted original research, have amassed substantial real world work experience in their niche field, and who have earned a terminal degree before considering their candidacy as a professor to teach courses at their university. However, if a candidate has amassed substantial real world work experience in their niche field and has only earned a master's degree with at least 18 graduate credit hours in the niche field that they want to teach subjects about then a college or university may consider their candidacy for a professorship position.

Deep work is the ability to focus without distraction on a cognitively demanding task. It's a skill that allows you to quickly master complicated information and produce better results in less time. Deep Work will make you better at what you do and provide the sense of true fulfillment that comes from craftsmanship. In Deep Work, author and professor Cal Newport flips the narrative on impact in a connected age. Instead of arguing distraction is bad, he instead celebrates the power of its opposite. Dividing this book into two parts, he first makes the case that in almost any profession, cultivating a deep work ethic will produce massive benefits. He then presents a rigorous training regimen, presented as a series of four "rules," for transforming your mind and habits to support this skill. 1. Work Deeply 2. Embrace Boredom 3. Quit Social Media 4. Drain the Shallows A mix of cultural criticism and actionable advice, Deep Work takes the reader on a journey through memorable stories—from Carl Jung building a stone tower in the woods to focus his mind, to a social media pioneer buying a round-trip business class ticket to Tokyo to write a book free from distraction in the air—and no-nonsense advice, such as the claim that most serious professionals should quit social media and that you should practice being bored. Deep Work is an indispensable guide to anyone seeking focused success in a distracted world. This book is written to help human service program administrators either in interpret or conduct program evaluations. Our intended audience includes administrators and those students being trained for careers in human services administration. Our focus is on persons interested in assessing programs in which people work with people to improve their condition. The book's title, Program Evaluation: A Field Guide for Administrators, describes how we hope you use this book-as a tool. In writing the book, we have attempted to meet the needs of persons who have to conduct program evaluations as well as those who must use those evaluations. Hence, we have attempted to make the book "user friendly. " You will find, for example, numerous guidelines, cautions, and specific suggestions. Use the book actively. Our primary motive is to help administrators make better decisions. In fact, the primary reason for program evaluation is to help program administrators make good decisions. These decisions often must balance the goals of equity (or fairness in the distribution of goods and services among people in the economy), efficiency (obtaining the most output for the least resources), and political feasibility. Take, for example, the administrator who must decide between a new program favored by some of the program's constituents, and maintaining the status quo, which is favored by other constituents.
